Culture is shared
Culture is learned
Culture is passed on from generation to generation
Culture is shared, learned, and passed on by language and symbols
Eating is not an element of culture
Smiling is not an element of culture
Race is not an element of culture
Personality traits are not elements of culture
Languages, customs, traditions, beliefs, spirituality, religion, work, worldview, etc.
Clothes, music, food, games, etc.
These aspects of culture are often those that provide the focus for multicultural "festivals" or "celebrations.

Behavior:
This is how we respond to others, the roles we take up, the language(s) we speak, and our type of nonverbal communication. It reflects values. Aspects to be listed in this category include language, gender roles, family structure, political affiliation, how we organize ourselves.

Concrete Items:
Clothes, music, food, games, etc.

Symbols:
Personal symbols, school symbols, community symbols, province/state/country/earth symbols, signs and symbols of businesses, etc.

Why do Coca-Cola, Cola, McDonald’s defend their logos so carefully?

Families
Smaller groups within one country
The role of family
Beliefs about child raising (children and teens)

Groups
Jewish groups
Racial groups
Religious groups
Schools
Work places

Social organization
Economic structures
Government
Knowledge
Art
Music
Dancing
Photography
Paintings
Literature

Entertainment, Leisure & Sport

Multicultural Diversity

Beliefs/Values
Concept of beauty
Concept of fairness
Concept of family
Concept of self
Attitudes about personal space, privacy
Attitudes about work ethic
Attitudes about time
Attitudes about various holidays
Nature of friendship, rules of polite behavior
Concept of fairness
Concept of beauty
Attitudes toward age
Concept of self
Concept of beauty
Concept of fairness
Concept of family
Concept of self

Eating is not an element of culture
Smiling is not an element of culture
Race is not an element of culture
Personality traits are not elements of culture
Language, customs, traditions, beliefs, spirituality, religion, work, worldview, etc.
Clothes, music, food, games, etc.
These aspects of culture are often those that provide the focus for multicultural "festivals" or "celebrations.

Behavior:
This is how we respond to others, the roles we take up, the language(s) we speak, and our type of nonverbal communication. It reflects values. Aspects to be listed in this category include language, gender roles, family structure, political affiliation, how we organize ourselves.